LAWS

OF THE

FRANKLIN COMPANY

OF

PHILADELPHIA.

With a Short Account of the Institution.

PHILADELPHIA:
Printed by John Ormrod, in Second-Street.

A SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE LIBRARY.

AMONG the various methods designed for promoting knowledge, no one appears better adapted to that important end than a publick Library. An institution of this kind is so generous and extensive in its nature, that it affords instruction on the most easy terms to all who are desirous of improvement. The opulent friend to learning may be furnished with authors not generally found in private collections; whilst the genius which might languish and be discouraged for want of proper opportunities, may have access to many volumes, containing the experience of past ages and the present times. When men thus possess the means of being acquainted with the arts and sciences, it may justly be expected that important enquiries will be prosecuted, and the good of society increased.

Sensible of the great advantages to be derived from this fruitful source, certain gentlemen laid the foundation of the present Library, in the year 1731, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing it enlarge, and prove useful, the best compensation for their care and services. In 1742 a charter was obtained, with Power to make laws, &c. incorporating them by the name of THE LIBRARY COMPANY OF PHILADLEPHIA.

Other Gentlemen of this city animated with the same liberal sentiments, and the success of these worthy Men, thought it necessary that more Libraries should be formed. These when establiſhed became alſo of publick utility, and remained long in a flouriſhing condition. The members however of the reſpective companies, conſidering, that for many reaſons it would conduce more to the advancement of literature, if the different libraries were united, agreed to join their Intereſts together, which in the year 1769, was happily accompliſhed.

That affairs may be better regulated, ten directors or managers of the library, and a Treaſurer are choſen yearly, by vote, at a general meeting of the company.

The price of a ſhare is fixed to ten pounds, and the annual payment of ten ſhillings: for which ſmall conſideration a perſon may have recourſe not only to ſome thouſand volumes, but to many valuable machines for making experiments in natural philoſophy. The members hold their eſtates in the library as tenants in common, and may diſpoſe of their ſhares by will or deed to others with the aſſent of the managers. They who incline to be admitted, apply to any one of the directors, who propoſes them at their next meeting and being approved of, they become members on paying the purchaſe money to the treaſurer.

Perſons who are not members may, notwithſtanding, borrow books, leaving in the hands of the librarian, as a pledge, a ſum of money in proportion to the value of the book, and paying a ſmall acknowledgement for the reading, which is applied to the benefit of the library.

Beſides the books hereafter mentioned in the catalogue as preſents to the library, the company have been favoured with ſeveral generous donations; as,

A curious air-pump, with its apparatus, given by the Honourable JOHN PENN, Eſq;

An electrical apparatus; a large pair of globes; a large reflecting teleſcope; a large double microſcope; a large camera obſcura, and a valuable lot of ground whereon to build a houſe for the library, given by the Honourable THOMAS PENN Eſq;

Pennſylvania foſſils, &c. given by Mr. Bartram.

Inſtruments and utenſils of the Eſkimaux, given by the North-Weſt company.

A Snake's ſkin, twelve feet long, and ſixteen inches over.

A Piece of marble, lately dug out of the ruins of Herculaneum.

An

An antique pewter dish, given by Mr. Stephen Paschall.

A very beautiful concha, given by R. G.

A Malabar manuscript, on leaves, given by the reverend Mr. Hugh Jones.

A Sea feather.

Some curious snakes, scorpions, &c. in a bottle of spirits.

A twelve inch concave reflecting mirrour, given by B. F.

Mitchell's map of North-America.

Prospect of London, from Westminster-bridge to London-bridge, by Messieurs Bucks.

Prospect of Portsmouth, by ditto.

A large cabinet, containing a very curious collection of American fossils, with several species of earth, clay, sand, &c. all methodically disposed, and explained by a numerical list or catalogue, giving an account from what place each sample was brought. This collection was the work of Mr. Samuel Hazard, late of this city, merchant, and was purchased for the company since his decease.

Two manuscripts in rolls, in the Russian language and character, given by Mr. Lewis Timothy.

The hand and arm of an Egyptian mummy presented by Mr. Benjamin West.

An hydrostatical balance with its appurtenances. Two solar microscopes. An air pump. Two pair of globes &c.
They possess also a handsome house in this city.

The valuable Collection of ancient MEDALS, in the Library, was received from England, (through the Hands of the Honourable Proprietary, THOMAS PENN, Esq;) with the following Remarks and Account of them.

THE Roman coins hereafter mentioned, are a small specimen of the several sorts of money made use of in that famous Empire, and are a present from Mr. Gray, of Colchester, to the public library of Philadelphia, as a token of the honour and esteem which he has for Pennsylvania.

Medals, merely considered as curiosities, are of very little value, and hardly worth the attention of prudent men; but when they are regarded as proofs and illuſtrations of hiſtory, or when the legends or reverſes contain any uſeful inſtructions, ſome benefit may be obtained from them.

The two firſt of the ſilver are conſular, and ſtruck before the time of the emperors. That with the head of Ceres, and the oxen at the plow on the reverſe, may not only allude to the ſuperſtitious ceremony uſed upon marking out a new colony, but to the agriculture, upon which the public welfare depends. The other, with the horſeman on the reverſe, regards purely the military glory, of which that people were ſo fond, and which at laſt proved their ruin, when their old laws were turned into a military government.

The firſt of the two is the propereſt preſent to Pennſylvania, tho' ſomething may be learned from the latter: A military force, for neceſſary ſelf-defence, is often wanted, to preſerve what induſtry has gained; but it never ſhould be allowed to extend itſelf ſo far, as to endanger what it is deſigned to protect.

Though we ought not to let our truſt in providence run into preſumption, or to the neglect of thoſe means which are put into our hands; yet there is ſomething more to be expected of ſecurity to this province, than to any other; becauſe they ſet out upon a better foundation. There is hardly an inſtance in the world, of a people's growing to ſuch a number, and ſuch a degree of ſtrength, without any one war, or military enterprize.

It is moſt ardently to be wiſhed, that the ſame virtue with which they began, and have hitherto continued, may remain as their ſupport for ages to come. While their virtue, their liberty, and their moderation laſt, their ſecurity will, in all probability, continue.

The ſilver imperial medals, any of the books upon that ſubject will explain; and for want of time they are but very ſlightly mentioned in the catalogue.

As to the firſt of the ſilver, it may be obſerved that the workmanſhip of it is Greek, and far ſuperior to any that follow.

The Grecian free ſtates (which ſome of our northern colonies reſemble) carried all arts and ſciences into the greateſt perfection.

The medallion of Veſpaſian is quite a picture of him, as are alſo moſt of the reſt; but as the empire declined, the work grew worſe; at beſt, it did not come up to the Greek.

The Palladium on the reverſe of Veſpaſian's coin, and many others, was probably emblematical. It was a gift of Minerva, that is wiſdom; and while that was with them, Rome was ſafe.

The laſt in the card of M. Aurelius is of very good work. That of Maguentius in middle braſs, with the chriſtain enſign upon it, is very barbarous and mean. The groſs barbariſm of thoſe times on the one hand, and the Platonic refinements on the other, were enough to deſtroy any thing but abſolute truth.

The

The medals in ſmall braſs, of Conſtantine, and the reſt, are good, and well preſerved; and that of Helena not eaſily to be met with. She was our townſwoman, and we have ſeveral authentic memorials of her.

The laſt, of Rome, with the wolf on the reverſe, and the founders of the city ſucking her, is emblematical likewiſe, and to be found on many of the medals of the higher empire. If the Romans would, by this, have been put in mind of their original, and preſerved their humility, a virtue they often practiſed in their beſt times (though they never pretended to it, nor had even a name for it as a virtue) it would have ſaved their ſtate, and ſtopped the luxury which proved their ruin.

ARGENTI.
